

BAD DESIGN

The image shows a web form with a vibrant, geometric background of orange and red gradients with bokeh light effects. At the top left is a back arrow icon. The title 'enter your details' is in a large, bold, black font. Below it are five input fields, each with a label: 'firstname' (italicized), 'mail', 'lastname', 'mobile', and 'pswrd' (lowercase). The labels are scattered around the fields. A blue 'Submit' button is located at the bottom right.

1. The background is loud and busy, competing with the form. Headings, labels, and inputs don't stand out clearly.
2. Too many elements crammed together (first name, last name, email, phone, password all scattered). It feels overwhelming.
3. The colorful geometric background distracts from the form and reduces readability.
4. Inputs and labels are misaligned and uneven, making the form harder to scan.
5. The submit button is small, off to the side, and easy to miss.

1. Strong contrast and spacing make it obvious what to read first: title → fields → submit button.
2. One column, well-spaced fields. Simple and calm.
3. Soft, subtle background shapes that don't compete with the content.
4. Everything is left-aligned and evenly spaced.
5. Large, centered submit button at the bottom—exactly where users expect it.
